Yesterday morning John F. Robinson, an oil worker, fell from a derrick, at Sistersville, a distance of seventy-two feet to the ground. Those who witnessed the accident and went to his assistance expected to find him crushed to a shapeless mass, but miraculously as it may seem the only injuries he sustained were a fracture of the clavicle, one or two broken bones in the hand and a sprain in his back. He was brought to the city yesterday afternoon over the Ohio river road and taken to the Wheeling Hospital in the patrol wagon. His injuries are not deemed serious.

INSTANTLY KILLED.

Mrs. Margaret Cahill Struck by a Baltimore & Ohio Train

IN FRONT OF THE CITY BUILDING

At 8 O'clock Last Evening—Was Evidently Hard of Hearing and Did Not See the Train—The Pilot Struck Her Over the Right Eye—A Large Crowd was Attracted to the Scene.

Last evening at six o'clock as Baltimore & Ohio passenger train No. 10 was proceeding up Sixteenth street out of the city for Washington, Pa., a most distressing fatality occurred at the corner of Chapline and Sixteenth. The train was going probably ten or twelve miles an hour when crossing the street. The watchman and gateman, Michael Horn, stood at the northeast corner with his flag in hand, and nobody seemed to be in the way. Almost as the train was upon her, however, a black dressed woman, who seemed to be about sixty years old, walked swiftly down Chapline and seemingly without noticing the approaching train started to cross the track. Just as she was at the edge of the track the pilot of the engine struck her a terrible blow on the head. The watchman, Horn, saw the woman probably just a second before the accident occurred, and instinctively ran toward her to keep her out of harm's way. He was too late, however, for just as he got hold of her dress the engine struck. The woman rolled over once or twice and then layed quite still. Horn and another spectator of the tragedy, John Winterheller, a young man picked up the unfortunate woman and arranged her clothing which had become disarranged and covered her head. When this had been done it was seen that the woman was fatally injured; a gaping hole over her right eye and another to the left had killed her almost instantly. She gave one or two gasps and was dead.

The accident created considerable excitement and soon a large crowd had gathered around the scene. The body was removed to the city building where it remained for nearly two hours before the coroner, Squire J. W. Schultze arrived on the scene. It was viewed by hundreds of people, but singularly enough none recognized the remains.

Finally Dr. R. H. Cummins arrived at the building, and at once said that the dead woman was Mrs. Margaret Cahill, who formerly lived in Wheeling, but for several months has made her home with her daughter, Mrs. Edward Christman, whose husband is a newspaper man of Washington, Pa., connected with the Reporter. For several days she has been here on a visit with old friends. She was an aunt of Mrs. C. W. Conner, of this city, and had been a professional nurse.

The coroner, Squire Schultze, held his inquest in the rooms of the police department. There were but two witnesses, Michael Horn and John Winterheller. Horn testified that he was watching the train and saw the woman just as she was struck, too late to do anything to save her. John Winterheller was coming down Chapline street at the time of the tragedy, and saw the woman in the middle of the street, walking toward the approaching train. Horn's back was turned toward the train and away from the woman, with his waving stick in his hand. As soon as the woman was struck Winterheller turned his head away from the sight. He went over to the body and with Horn picked it up. He also testified that the woman's head was down when she was crossing the street, and that she wore a projecting bonnet. When she was picked up her lips were moving for a second or two. A verdict in accordance with the facts was rendered.

The remains were taken to Frew's undertaking establishment where they were prepared for burial. Mrs. Cahill's daughter, Mrs. Christman, of Washington, was telegraphed to last night, and the funeral will probably take place there.
